

Alison Sampson describes the art project “Think of a City” as an “exquisite corpse,” the name of the parlor game played by the surrealists in the cafes of Paris during the 1920s and '30s. The game involved a piece of folded paper onto which, in turn, each member of a group drew a part of [...]

Read more: <http://robot6.comicbookresources.com/2013/11/think-of-a-city-celebrates-world-building-power-of-comics/>