Men In Black 3 has had its fair share of problems from supposed script problems to Will Smiths gigantic bus that was irritating New Yorkers. More problems seemed to have surfaced recently mentioning that Smith has been displaying some extreme star behavior. This includes having sets torn down and rebuilt to better suit his style of acting. Reports The Wrap: Smith also had a set rebuilt in order to accommodate an improvised scene he filmed, according to two people involved in the production. The scene involved a telephone call between Smith's character, Agent J and Tommy Lee Jones's character, Agent K. Some time after Jones filmed his portion of the call, it was Smith's turn. But Smith improvised quite a bit, and his part of the conversation no longer matched Jones's. Smith told producers he wanted to see Jones on camera responding to the new material -- a request that required the crew

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JakeLester/news/?a=40153&t=Budget_For_iMen_In_Black_3i_Hits_The_215_Million_Mark