

DC has stated due to the backlash that nothing has changed but the story itself was simply a look at what could be and not what is. I'm sure all of you will rejoice at this news and I can be the first to say that I certainly told you so when you were all freaking out that it wouldn't last. The story hasn't been released even a week now and it's already been backtracked and put down as a standalone story so you all can rest assured. Here's the thing though; the story wasn't half as bad as people made it out to be. I read it and I didn't see the big deal. Here's a summary of the full story for the misinformed: "Superman arrives to meet Gabriel Wright, the President's National Security advisor. Pleasantries do not last as Superman senses he is marked for death. Snipers armed with kryptonite
