

A while back we learned that George Lucas would be bringing a live-action Star Wars series to television, but little more information has been given since...until today. In an interview with G4's Attack of the Show (via TV Guide), Lucas gives a bit of an update on the series. The writer/director says that he has got over 50 hours worth of script complete for the potential television series. So what's the hold up? Lucas said the project was on hold while he looks for "a different type of technology we can use so it's economically feasible to shoot the shows." Not sure exactly what type of technology he is waiting for, but I would venture to say it's a good thing that he wants the technology to be top notch, not just for the series, but for the fans as well. Go big or go home, right? The series will chronicle the events that

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/geekboymovienews/news/?a=38429&amp;t=George\_Lucas\_Updates\_on\_Live\_action\_iStar\_Wars\_iLive-Action\_Series