

Most of you know Jonathan Frakes from 'Star Trek: The Next Generation', but these days he is mostly seen behind the camera directing shows like 'Burn Notice', and 'V'. Frakes recently sat down with UGO.com and talked with him about his desire to direct a comic-book movie, the current Star Trek franchise, and they even ask him about the cartoon 'Gargoyles'. When asked if he'd be interested in doing a comic-book movie: " I've been trying to get one of those big ones, Fantastic Four, Iron Man...really, nothing would thrill me more." On 'Star Trek': "Specifically with Star Trek I was really impressed with J.J [Abrams]' reboot out of our franchise, I thought he was loyal to the Roddenberry philosophy. The scope of the show was spectacular, the casting and storytelling. Unlike some in the Star Trek family, I'm thrilled with what J.J. has done with the franchise. I was watching

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/Dustin03Comics/news/?a=34881&t=Jonathan_Frakes_Talks_Gargoyles_Star_Trek_Directing_A_Comic-Book_Movie