

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/vampiresandslayers/news/?a=28483&t=Joss_Whedons_Open_Letter_to_Fans

Writes Joss: So, our endless season ends. We've laughed, we've cried, we've thrown up a little in our mouths, but most of all we've learned. Not you guys—us. We've learned what you like, what you don't, how this TV show translated to the world of comics, and how it didn't quite. We've lost a few fans along the way and, hopefully, gained a few. I can't say exactly how much has changed, in our lives or our work. The only thing that's certain is this: all of us involved in this venture, without exception, have weirder-looking hair. If you've read this issue, you've got a sense of where we're heading for Season 9. Back, a bit, to the everyday trials that made Buffy more than a superhero. That made her us. I was so excited to finally have an unlimited budget that I wanted to make the book an epic, but I