

SUPERHERO TOONIVERSE: My family and I happened to catch the first two episodes, and we were all laughing our asses off. SPIKE BRANDT: I think, the original Looney Tunes cartoons weren't just made for children, they were made for everyone and that's pretty much the same approach we wanted to take, too. The whole goal was, we didn't want to make a show that wasn't appropriate for kids, but there's stuff in there for adults and kids. The best of animation, the best of these characters, always had a broad appeal, so that was definitely something we wanted to do. SUPERHERO TOONIVERSE: Why do you think that the Looney Tunes characters have become such a hard sell to today's kids when they used to be loved by all? TONY CERVONE: You know, for a long time, they didn't have a lot of competition – there weren't that many cartoons that were being made

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/SuperHeroTooniverse/news/?a=36999&t=LOONEY_TUNES_EXCLUSIVE_Interview_with_Series_Creators_Spike_Brandt_Tony_Cervone