

According to the guys over at Furious Fanboys, the first Marvel themes attraction to hit Disneyland might just be a version of the Stark Expo first seen in Iron Man 2. Apparently, they're planning on installing the event into "Tomorrowland", or more specifically, the apparently hated renovated Eisner-era infomercial building "Innoventions". According to the site: What began as just a rumor on Twitter and Disneyland messageboards is apparently not really a rumor; sources say it's well beyond that. Apparently Walt Disney Imagineering has drawings, renderings, and costume designs all ready to go. They also speculate that it could be open to the public as soon as next summer, although there is no firm time frame for the it quite yet. What do you guys make of this? With The Avengers less than a year away, expect more developments on this very soon! With an all star cast which includes Chris Evans as Captain America, Robert
