

Ok, let me start by saying that this isn't much of a review in my opinion. It's basically a couple of paragraphs on the story and how Green Lantern isn't Thor.. No performances are so much as touched upon, and really, I will be waiting for something a little more in depth before taking this guy's word for it. But, it is one of the first reviews to hit so here are the "highlights" from it..

"Are you ready to have your mind blown?" asks Ryan Reynolds in Green Lantern. It's a leading question that lays down the gauntlet for Martin Campbell's belated intro to one of DC Comics' second-tier crime-fighters. Put a line like that in your script and it practically requires you to be mind-blowing. Unfortunately, Lantern isn't. It's instructional to compare and contrast with Kenneth Branagh's Thor, the last attempt to alchemise a lesser-known property into box-office gold. That movie,

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/rorschachsrants/news/?a=39449&t=The_First_Green_Lantern_Review_Is_In