Earlier today, we heard from director Matthew Vaughn about both his experiences while filming the controversial X-Men: First Class as well as that leaked image of the cast which was met with a huge amount of criticism due to it looking more than a little dodgy. His exact words in fact were, "I don't think it's a Fox image. It's not a pre-approved image. It's like a bad photoshop, which maybe it was by someone. It didn't reflect the movie." Interesting. Well, according to a report from Latino Review, he was in fact being less than truthful about that, and there are also some serious problems with how the film is coming together. Here are some excerpts from that report. Apparently, Matthew Vaughn got put on blast this morning for straight up LYING to Slashfilm about that so called leaked FOX picture. The movie is still shooting in LA while Vaughn is somewhere
