

Warner Brothers has found its man to direct the upcoming spin off the the hit movie 300. According to Heat Vision Noam Murro (Smart People) will fill the role of director for 300: Battle of Artemisia that will be based off of Frank Millers Graphic novel that will be release later this year. Zack Snyder has written the script with Johnstad with a the intention of shooting the film in the same style that Snyder did with 300. Reports Heat Vision: Warner Bros. has zeroed in on Noam Murro to direct its 300 spin-off, 300: Battle of Artemisia (formerly known as Xerses). Murro was vying for the gig with Jaume Collet-Serra, the director of this year's Liam Neeson thriller Unknown. But Warners, which liked both directors, in Solomon-like wisdom divided up gigs for the filmmakers, yesterday handing Collet-Serra the adaptation of Akira. An official offer to Murro is expected to be made early next week. In

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JakeLester/news/?a=41877&t=Warner_Brothers_Hires_Noam_Murro_To_Direct_300_Battle_of_Artemisia