

To be honest and to start off, I actually was initially pissed by the decision of this 'First Class' to not feature the original five, which I was so curious to see. Nevertheless, as things started to come out, I agreed that everything looks great, and so I tried to forget the original five for a while and to accept this movie as what it is. I think of less a loyal adaptation and more as a movie. The result? Let's just begin: Story and Script: If asked what makes First Class a good movie, one of them should be the story. From highlighting the relation and development between the characters, the twists, and of course, how the action scenes are presented and how those are featured to be necessary to the main plot, the parts of the story are very well structured. The writer smartly puts enough twists to avoid the story
